SAFETY & CONTRAINDICATIONS: The use of turmeric as a spice and as a household remedy has been known to be safe for centuries. To date, no studies in either animals or humans have discovered any toxic effects associated with the use of turmeric (Lao C. et al, BMC complement Altern. Med., 2006, 6: 10-3) and it is clear that turmeric is not toxic even at very high dose. The US Food and Drug Administration has conducted its own clinical trials with turmeric and published a 300 page monograph. The FDA declares turmeric and its active component curcumin as GRAS. In a phase I clinical study on the safety and tolerance of turmeric oil use, the oil was administered orally to healthy volunteers for 3 months. No side effects of turmeric oil intake were observed in 3 months on body weight, blood pressure, and haematological, renal, or hepatic toxicity. (Joshi et al, J. Assoc Physicians India, 2003, 51:1055-60).

PRECAUTIONS: Turmeric in food is considered safe. However taking large amounts of turmeric for long period of time may cause stomach upset. People with gall stones or obstruction of the bile passage should talk to their doctor before taking curcumin. Because turmeric may act as a blood thinner, it is advised that patients should stop taking turmeric 2 weeks prior to surgery, if any.

ADVERSE DRUG INTERACTION: Turmeric may potentiate the effects of Warfarin, clopidogrel & Aspirin. It may interfere adversely (= antagonistic action) with the action of H2 antagonists (like Ranitidine & Famotidine) & PPI (like Omeprazole & lansoprazole). Turmeric may lower blood sugar levels, and when combined with medication for diabetes could cause hypoglycemia.

DOSES & ADMINISTRATION: HPURE lozenges should be sucked slowly. The suggested doses are 1 to 2 lozenges 3 times a day. (However if need arises, the doses can be doubled)
